The image shows a fragment of ancient parchment or leather, characterized by its brown, fibrous texture and significant signs of age and damage. The surface is marked with faint, dark, and mostly illegible symbols and characters, which appear to be remnants of a script. These markings are scattered across the surface, with some concentration in the upper and lower portions. The parchment is torn at the edges, particularly on the right side, and shows signs of staining and discoloration. A prominent vertical crease runs down the center of the fragment, suggesting it was once part of a larger sheet. The overall appearance is that of a well-preserved but heavily weathered historical artifact.

Fragment of a papyrus scroll with handwritten text in two columns. The text is written in a cursive script, likely from the Hellenistic or Roman period. The fragment is heavily damaged, with significant tearing and loss of material, particularly along the right edge and bottom. The text is arranged in approximately 15 lines per column. The left column contains text that appears to be a list or a series of entries, while the right column contains more continuous text. The fragment is mounted on a dark background, and a ruler is visible on the left and bottom edges for scale.
